Bangkok-born, 24-year-old Eric Koston is the poster boy for the phrase "actions speak louder than words." Since his early days with H-street, Eric's skateboarding's stood out in the sea of cookie-cutter pros and trendy tricks, but he's been far from vocal about it. From mini-ramp 540s to nollie heelflip noseslides on ten-plus-stair rails, Eric may not have written the book of modern skateboarding, but he was certainly one of its biggest contributors. Just don't ask him to read it aloud.

What was your favorite year in skateboarding? Maybe the first years.

Why's that?

Because everything was new. Everything. Now it can't be as new as it was then.

Who's been your biggest inspiration in skateboarding?

Mark Gonzales from the beginning. What about him inspired you?

His skating, and it seemed like he was always joking around, too. It seemed like he enjoyed what he was doing. He was having fun with it. Danny Way, too. Just how good he was at everything. And all the guys from way back—the whole Bones Brigade days.

What's the stupidest trend you've seen skateboarding go through?

Long handrails [laughs]. No, I'm just kidding. Probably all the bad clothes, like in '92 all the big, bad, ugly clothes. Big T-shirts, crazy-colored Fuct pants, late flips, and everything that went with that whole 1992 era. It was pretty awful. Late flips, late shove-its—skating was just horrible.

Did you get mixed up in the horribleness?

Yeah, it sucked, everybody got mixed up in it in one way or another.

No one's innocent of that era.

Nobody.

What do you consider your biggest contribution to skatehnarding?

My biggest contribution? I don't know what I've contributed.

I think you've contributed a lot to the progression of tricks.

I don't know if I have, but other people have. I've just always tried to keep progressing, but there're other people who've influenced that as well. It's definitely not just me.

Describe the current state of skateboarding.

Skateboarding's cleaned up its act ... a lot. You know, not completely, but in a lot of ways. It's progressing, but not so much trick-wise as how big people are going. Like the size of handrails, stuff like that. But you don't see it progressing in regard to how technical tricks are?

It is, a little, but it's hard for it to progress too far too fast.

I guess if you progress too far, you end up with late flips and late shove-its.

Yeah. And it's going back that way, too; some people are doing that stuff again ... which is kinda weird. But for the people who are doing it, maybe it's new to them. Maybe they weren't skating in '92, you know what I mean? Maybe they saw an old video full of all these weird-ass tricks from '92, and that could be influencing people who are doing stuff like that now. Who knows? Do you have any predictions for skateboarding's future?

I don't know.

Can it get more technical, trick-wise?

It's gonna be both [big and tech], because there's that mix. There're so many more people skateboarding than there were before. There's going to be a variety—both big and technical. Skateboarding has become a lot more consistent in the last few years—even with the most technical stuff—and it'll probably keep getting more consistent.

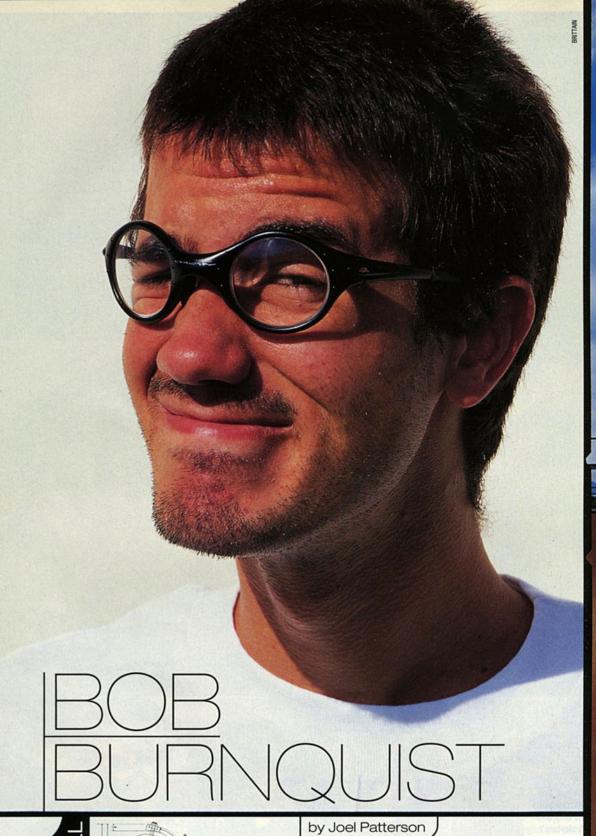

Do you see it getting more and more popular?

It still is getting bigger, and if the ratings keep going up, skateboarding's going to keep growing. But when the ratings go down, if they do, it could definitely get smaller again.

I guess it works in cycles.

That's true, it does work in cycles. I don't know where the peak is for skating this time around, hopefully it's a lot further away.

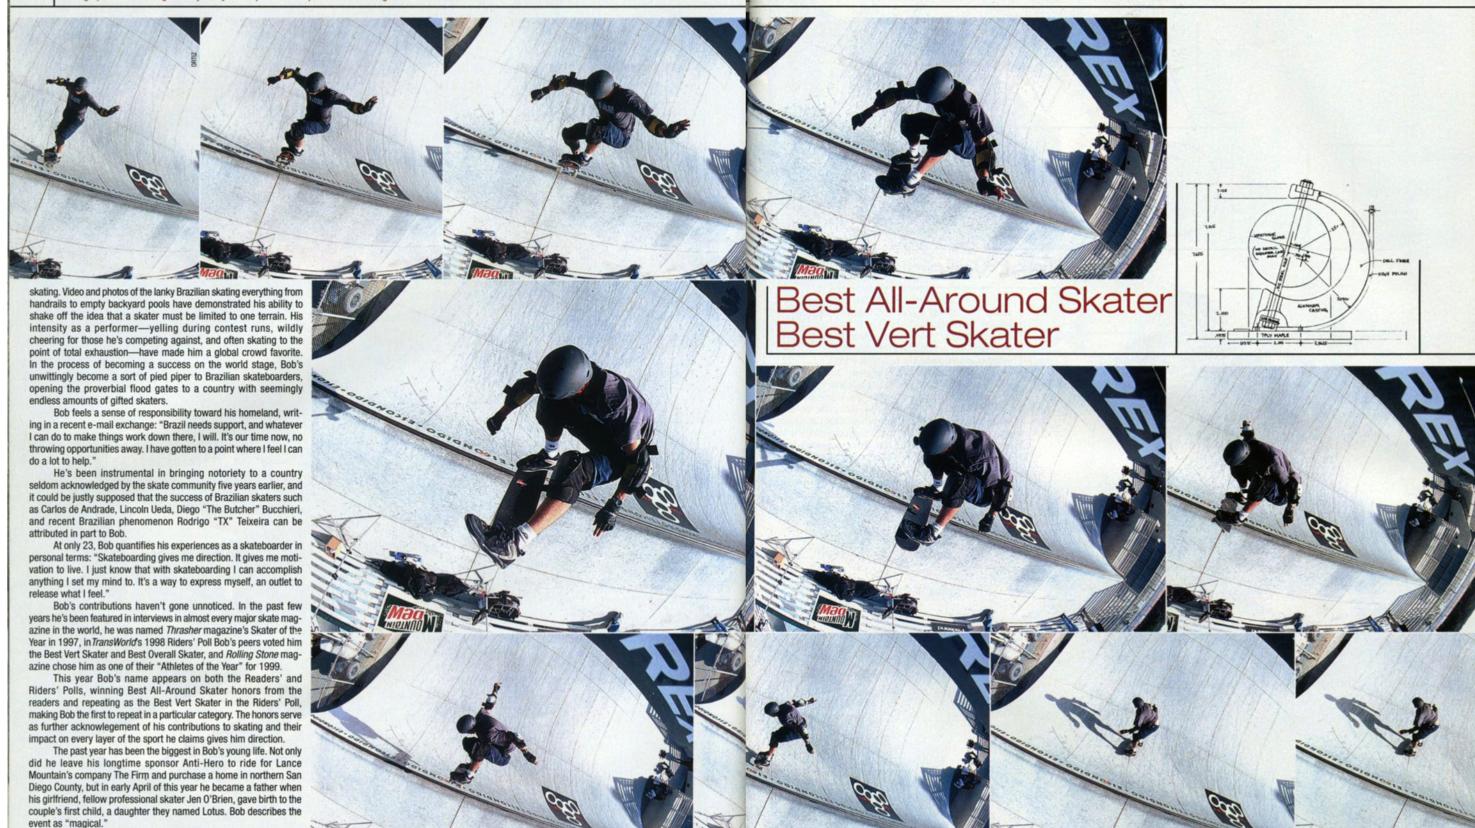

Best All-Around Skater

In May of 1995, a young, almost completely unknown Brazilian vert skater wearing tube socks pulled to his knees showed up at the Slam City Jam contest in Vancouver, Canada and spent the weekend changing the course of vert skating forever. Seventeen-year-old Bob Burnquist and his switch frontside airs, disasters, and 50-50s left those in attendance as confused about what had transpired as they were excited about the future. He had personally nudged vert skating a step closer to the technicality of street, incorporating entirely switch-stance lines and bringing a sense of renewal to a sport still reeling from the sudden fall in popularity it had experienced four years earlier.

Bob has emerged as one of the most influential skateboarders of the second half of the 1990s, but not only in the realm of vert

"I feel as if I'm more focused on what I do," Bob says of his new role as provider. "I need to be more focused for Lotus, for Jen ... for my family! It's quite a change. There's a lot more to it now—I got a house, had a kid, and I'm about to build a ramp! I'm very thankful for all these things that God's allowed me to cherish for this lifetime."

Best Street Skater

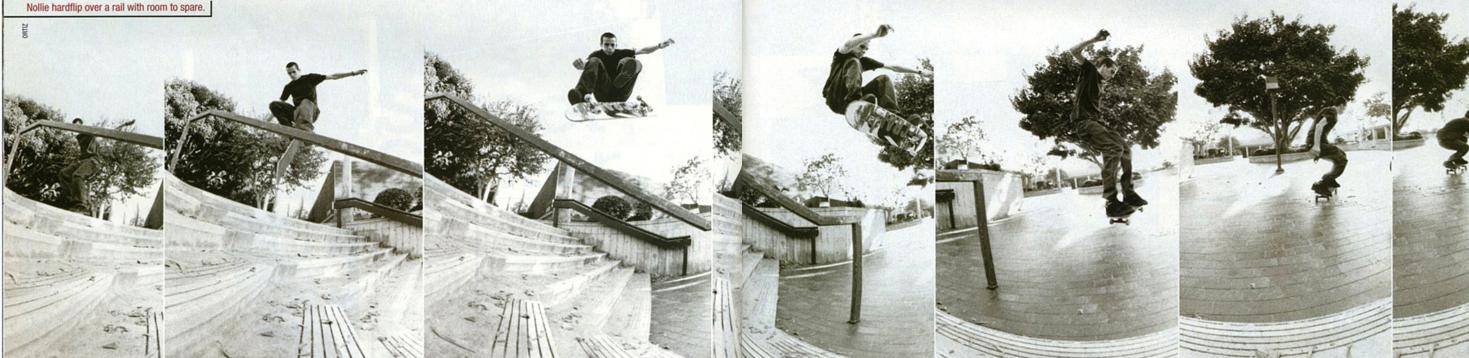

RCRANK McCRANK

Welcome to the next level. At this stage,
Rick McCrank can do airs like professional fighter pilots, come up with more skate-combo meals than McDonald's, bust nollie kickflip lip-slides on handrails, and stomp his tricks smoother than a tub of butta on a hot summer day. All this while simultaneously raising a family, starting a wheel company, designing a shoe, filming nonstop, golfing, snowboarding, and don't forget being voted best street skater. Ahhhhl! This sounds like a crazy video game. By the way, Rick is going to be in a video game. So we can safely say Rick McCrank didn't "chill" his way into the Best Street Skater award—he paid his dues and worked for it. But how do you get an interview with someone this busy? Well, we shot McKrills a bunch of e-mail questions, and he bounced 'em back to us. Welcome to the Ricky Digital interview.

Do you have any nicknames?

Cranker, Cranky, McKrills, McDank, Lick MaDank, et cetera. I don't know many people who call me Rick. Okay, if the Girl team was forced to wrestle in a steel-cage match, and Sheffey had to be the referee, who would win?

Sean would win, regardless.

Are you going to be in the TransWorld SKATEboarding video game?

Yup. I'm pretty psyched. The people who are making the game are doing it here in Vancouver, so I can go over there and check the progress whenever I want.

sleeve, like that no-handed airwalk? Maybe that could be your secret trick in the game?

Not really. I did this one trick on a kinked rail in a park, where I do a couple tricks in one, but that isn't anything new. As far as my secret trick, I don't know yet. What's it like hanging out with Rick Howard and Eric Koston? Are those guys always making jokes and just doing funny shit, or what?

It's so rad. Howard likes to throw things at people, and he always seems to hit them in the head. Once in Tampa he threw a size-twelve shoe from the third floor at me while I was in the pool, when I wasn't watching. He out and drowning. I saw Rick throw a full soda can at Eric and split his head open. Eric got it on film, because he had a camera in his hand at the time.

Was that Whiskey snowboard video your video debut? Did those guys ever ask you to break bottles over your head or anything?

No, they never asked me to do anything like that, they knew what I was about. The first video I was in was this one out of Whistler called The Burning. My friends Murray Siple and Brad MacGregor made it. One day I was sitting in my house in Whistler, when this guy called and said, "Hey, I'm Brad. I hear you're good, do you wanna go That's cool. Do you have any other crazy tricks up your | just missed my head by a hair; I would've been knocked | to the city and film?" I said sure. I went and met a photographer named Scott Serfas and Moses [Itkonen]. My board was so beat that when Moses set up a new one, he gave me his old one. I switch ollied over the rail at the new spot. Scott shot it, and it ended up on the cover of this Canadian mag called Concrete Powder. So I guess I owe my whole career to Brad for the call. I don't think I would have pursued it otherwise.

So, why are you number 31 in the éS ads?

I wanted a number that was special to me, and Kalea's [Rick's daughter] birthday is on the 31st of May, so I figured it doesn't get any more special than that.

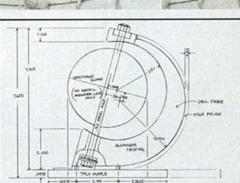

Who do you think has the best kickflip? Best 360 flip? I like Josh Kalis' 360 flips and Daewon's fakie 360 flips, and I like Mike Carroll's kickflips because he catches

Do you live by a motto?

Not really. I guess if I did it would be to just go with it. I never in a million years thought I'd have what I have today. I don't think I could have planned for it. I always thought I wouldn't amount to anything-maybe I won't. Ever watch MTV?

Nope, we don't have MTV in Canada, we have Much Music, but I don't watch that. I almost never watch TV. If I do, I watch the Food Network, the Golf Channel, or videos. I watch a lot of Kalea's French cartoons on video.

So what kind of music do you listen to?

I listen to everything. A lot of hip-hop, but I prefer the beats over the lyrics 'cause a lot of lyrics are dumb. I truly like everything, though. I was heavy into Stan Getz for a while—once I was in Milwaukee at a competition and I went into a record shop and bought ten Stan Getz records. I guess it depends on my moods. There's nothin' like some straight-edge hardcore to get you angry.

Who did you vote for? Best Street Skater?

Koston-always killing it.

Best Vert Skater?

McKay-so fresh.

Best All-Around?

McKay.

Best Style?

we're going to put in a game and a chat room.

Whenever I see footage of you falling, it's like you're joking or doing it on purpose. Do you have any tips on how to fall gracefully?

I guess I'm lucky 'cause I'm light. I try to slide when I fall, and it spreads my weight out. I slide on my butt a lot, though, and I get wedgies every time.

Are there any tricks you would like to see people start doing again?

Anything on vert. I think vert is the funnest thing in skating—once you get over the fear, that is.

Are there any tricks that bug you? Like most people hate benihanas or pressure flips.

Not really. I used to dislike all those shove-in,

If Kalea's being baby-sat, we'll go all day.

What other stuff do you do besides skate?

In the winter I really like to snowboard. I used to live in Whistler—that was sick. I like to ride big mountains. Lately I've been riding park and pipe a lot. I also love to golf. I think most skaters golf; if they don't, I bet they will some time. Other than that, I just hang with my family.

What was up with the egg incident in South Africa? Didn't you, Rick Howard, Eric Koston, and Atiba go crazy egging cars or something?

We had this demo at a rave. It was kind of a surprise demo 'cause we didn't know about it until that day—there was a few of those in S.A. Anyway, when we Justin Strubbing-underrated killer.

Best Video Part?

Scott Johnston.

Best Video?

Chocolate Tour-minus me.

What's the deal with Momentum wheels?

I mentioned to Jody [Morris] I wanted to start a wheel company, so I'd have something to fall back on after skating. He said he'd be into it. He's the main reason we did it, though—he had the motivation to start things up. We've got a good team, and most importantly we've got good products. I'm pretty proud of what we've made. Hey, can I get a Momentum sweatshirt?

It's in the mail, you can check out the styles at momentumskate.com—our site is sick. We have three music tracks to choose from in the background, plus shove-out ledge tricks, and I realized I didn't like 'em cause I couldn't do 'em.

What questions do you get asked the most by people when you go on tour? Like, "When is the next Girl video coming out?" or what?

It's usually, "Can I have your board?" or "Were you in The End?"

Ummm, if you were an albino spider monkey and you did a roast-beef grab with your prehensile tail, what would the grab be called?

Faux dink.

From what I hear, you skate every day for at least a couple hours. Is that true?

Yeah, I skate when it's dry. We don't have an indoor park here, which is pretty strange considering all the outdoor parks we have. But, yeah, at least a couple of hours.

were driving to the demo, and I was in this local guy John's truck, and everyone else was in the van. So for some reason I started throwing stuff that was laying around in the truck at the van. First it was little things, then it was wheels, bearings, and stuff. We pulled over 'cause we were lost. Then Eric ran out of the van and threw an unopened cup of yogurt at the truck. The window was open and it filled the truck with yogurt. After that we went to the rave, me and John were covered in yogurt. On the way home we went to a store to get water and snacks. We grabbed tons of yogurt and eggs, that's when the war started. That went on for the rest of the trip.
